Logan Sets $12.5 Million Drive To Make Rose Best in Country

Rose Polytechnic Institute President John A. Logan announced a $12.5 million, 10-year capital campaign on Parents Day to "make Rose the best undergraduate engineering and science school in the country."

Occasion of his announcement was a Great Centennial Convocation staged by Rose to inaugurate the greatest decade of development in the 91-year history of the school leading to its 100th anniversary in 1972.

$414,300 Pledged

To launch the campaign Dr. Logan coupled his announcement with the surprising news that $414,300 had already been pledged by 24 friends. That, he said, was 23 per cent of the campaign's first phase goal of $1,775,000.

Included in that initial phase are three dormitories; a million-dollar campus center-dining hall; remodeling and additions to classrooms and labs in the Main building; new roads, parking and land-

Convocation Speakers Support Rose's New Program

Nearly 1,500 parents, alumni, students and other friends of Rose Polytechnic Institute attended its Great Centennial Convocation, Parents Weekend, to hear six nationally recognized leaders in industry, education and government discuss the urgent need for Rose's new academic program, "a liberal education in science and engineering."

Speakers at a symposium the first night of the weekend were Dr. J. C. Warner, president emeritus, Carnegie Institute of Technology; Dr. Elvis Stahr, Indiana University president and Army Secretary in the Kennedy Administration; James C. Donnell II, Marathon Oil Co. president; and Robert Becherer, Link-Belt Co. board chairman.

Speakers at the second day convocation were Dr. Luther Terry, U.S. surgeon general; and James Webb, administrator of N.A.S.A. (National Aeronautics and Space Administration).

What Dr. Warner Said

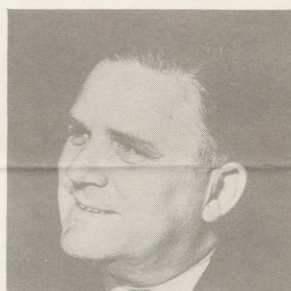

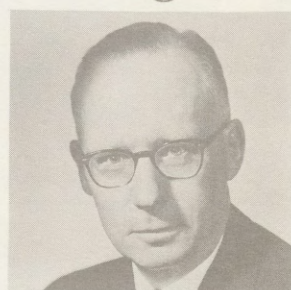

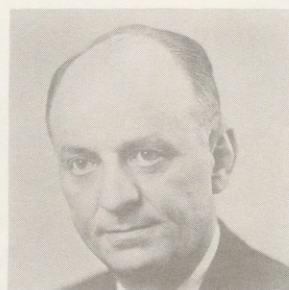

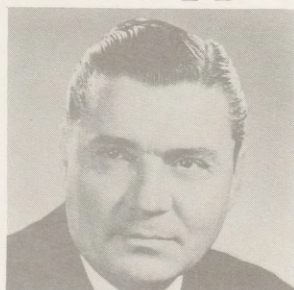

Discussing the marriage of humanities with engineering and science education, Dr. Warner said:

"... we should stand by the decisions made back in the 1930's that scientific and engineering education needed to be liberalized by providing curriculum time for a solid, effective core of studies in the humanities and social sciences.

"... it is now clearly recognized that our scientific and technological problems invariably contain social, economic, political or moral elements... we cannot give complete or best solutions without considering these elements and without taking into account human behavior."

Dr. Stahr, discussing the importance of humanities in a higher education, said:

"... education has a responsibility to prepare students not just for a 40-hour working week but for a full 112 hours or more of the living week. Even during the performance of an occupation, make no mistake about it, men have need of a learning that is beyond training, that is in a true sense liberal and liberating, which provides the framework for social interaction, for political responsibility, for decision-making. And of those other, those non-occupational hours, he lives or merely exists depending on his capacity for the inner life of the mind and the spirit, the enrichment of social intercourse, the plain enjoyment of literature, music, art, nature, travel and the role of the worthy parent."

The industrialists likewise saw a need for humanities in the education of engineers and scientists. Mr. Donnell said:

"... learning is a never-ending process. Regardless of where one's talents and satisfaction may lead him, it will be increasingly necessary to keep on learning and to pass on one's learning; that is, to teach. With machinery and technology handling a larger and larger share of the routine and the tedious, the need for creative manpower will expand — and creative skills are not inborn, they have to be cultivated, trained and developed."

What Mr. Becherer Said

Mr. Becherer commented:

"We do have a problem in this country to achieve full employment. The solution is not simple because the unemployable population is constantly increasing. While industry needs skilled employees and employees, who need further training are being given the opportunity to improve their job skills, it is the unskilled... that presents the problem. Private industry and private education must assist in finding methods to build their morale and to make them a part of productive society. Students should be given courses that will give them a better understanding of how to meet such social conditions."

And even the government leaders supported the need for engineers and scientists to study humanities. Dr. Terry said:

"The need for teamwork in science and engineering; the fact that professional people are increasingly called upon to act as leaders and administrators of a team effort; the fact that so many American graduates in engineering often become business and management executives concerned with economic and other public policy matters; and our growing obligation to society — have all stimulated a broadening of the engineering curriculum. A broad liberal education, with emphasis in the humanities as well as the sciences, is necessary for the creative role which engineers now play in our society."

Mr. Webb concluded:

"You here at Rose Polytechnic are inaugurating a great new decade in your history. You are preparing to play a role of greater significance in the future. You are thus symbolic of much that is happening in this country. Your hope is to offer greater resources to a great society that among other worthwhile programs is now boldly starting to solve such fundamental problems as poverty, disease and hunger."
