Dance Theater of Harlem

Last week, Dance Theater of Harlem came to Terre Haute to give a Master Class for the Terre Haute Academy of Dance and to perform at Rose-Hulman Institute of Technology, sponsored in part by the Rose-Hulman Center for Diversity. The Dance Theater of Harlem was founded by Arthur Mitchell and Karel Shook in 1969.

From the beginning, it was called “one of ballet’s most exciting under- takings,” according to a 1971 article in The New York Times. Dance Theater of Harlem prides itself on “commitment toward enriching the lives of young people,” according to the arts, according to their website.

again, and finally, moving on to start the process once again with the stu- dent on the neighboring green chair.

Conductively, more than once groups began to appear, roaming the halls and asking the students. Who are these strange people? Why are they here? Why do they behave this way? Hand. This was not a usual Thurs- day afternoon. This past Thursday, March 22, was the day of the 2018 Rose Spring Art Exhibit. From 4:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m., students and mem- bers of the public alike could wander through the halls of first and second floors of Moench to admire the artwork lin- ing the walls and to chat with the art- ists responsible for the pieces. As students, we see this artwork all the time. I make eye contact with that quilted tiger almost every day. But this was an opportunity to admire them, and even speak with their cre- ators. The variety of art on the walls of Moench is astounding. The types of art on display range from oil on canvas to... something called nail pointillism.

The dance was a blend of jazz and ballet, creating a distinct feel that is analogous to recreations of iconic textures and literal depictions of the original bottle, as well as impas- sioned works that expressed local sentiments. It was a usual Thursday afternoon on the second floor of Moench. The mild March sun gently warmed the space and students were perched up- on those perfectly-entangled green cushion pressed up against the walls. Furtively sifting through their homework due the next day, the old school. One of the four women barely noticed the groups of middle- aged people that began to appear in front of them, holding plates of crackers and cheese.

As if that wasn’t enough, just up the stairs hangs another piece of art with walls in all of Terre Haute area. The bottles ranged from founding and development of the Terre Haute area. Coke Bottle Exhibit Revealed!

Last Thursday, months of hard work and artistic expression were un- veiled to the Terre Haute community in the form of 27 giant fiberglass Coca-Cola bottles. Shaped like the original bottle design, the bottles ranged from founding and development of the original bottle to recreations of iconic textures and as an integral part of the Terre Haute community for hundreds of years. It was no surprise that Rose- Hulman had a bottle of its own. Paint- ed by our Director of Administrative Services, Bryan Bromstrup, the bottle will now be displayed on campus out- side of Hatfield Hall. Keep your eyes peeled for announcements of its arri- val.

The opening number was a rendi- tion of Michael Gluck’s “The Bottle Di- alogue,” a classic by any standard. Origi- nally choreographed by George Bal- inchine, the number captured a deli- cate grace exuded by each of the per- formers. The dance was a blend of jazz and ballet, creating a distinct feel that could only be executed by a team with a caliber as high as Dance Theater of Harlem.

Thank you, Terre Haute, for your love, and appreciation for our city’s history. As of now, the coke bottles are on display in Hatfield Hall, for your enjoyment. Keep your eyes peeled for announcements of its arrival!

Deficit? What Deficit?

Marc Schmitt
Staff Writer

President Trump signed a $1.3 trillion spending bill on Friday, ending a weeklong push to fund the government and avoid a third government shutdown this year. The bill funds the government through September.

Trump threatened to veto the 2,240-page bill hours before signing it because it did not include language to deal with DACA and provided only $1.57 billion for a border wall. The money will fund construction of a 33 mile stretch of fencing along the Texas border.

The president turned down a deal last week that would have paired $25 billion for a border wall with a path to citizenship for undocumented immigrants.

Both Democrats and Republicans managed to work their priorities into the omnibus package. Republicans agreed to match a $63 billion increase in domestic spending with an $80 billion increase in defense spending.

Conservative lawmakers balked at increasing spending and failing to take action against the government’s growing deficit. Kentucky Republican Senator Rand Paul threatened to filibuster the bill, citing Republican promises to reign in government spending.

Idaho Republican Senator Jim Risch also threatened to force a shutdown over a provision that would remove a national park after a deserted political rival. The bill raises spending to more than $2 trillion above the 2011 limits set by Congress. Domestic spending will go toward increased funding for the National Institutes of Health, education, opioid research and treatment, veterans’ health, and infrastructure.

Increased defense spending will go toward purchasing 14 new ships, 287 new aircraft and upgrades, and 261 tanks. The budget also includes a 2.4% pay raise for troops, the first since 2010.

Also included in the bill are measures to improve the national gun background check system, roll back a rule that critics argued blocked the CDC from conducting research on gun violence, and provide safety grants to schools to prevent mass shootings.

Congress repeatedly breaks its own fiscal caps, resulting in a staggering budget deficit.

DO NOT CONGRATULATE

Marc Schmitt

Russian President Vladimir Putin won reelection on Sunday, March 18. Putin won 75% of the vote with 67.5% turnout. Putin’s victory was expected given his popularity, with polling consistently showing 80% approval ratings.

The election was widely considered to be predetermined. On election day, there were accusations of ballot stuffing and other measures meant to rig the election.

Putin’s only viable competitor was barred from entering the race because of a recent conviction, although some allege that the charges were trumped-up.

President Trump congratulated Putin on his reelection victory over a phone call, during which they discussed various subjects. Briefing materials leaked afterwards included a section stating “DO NOT CONGRATULATE.”

Putin’s reelection comes amid heightened tensions with Western leaders. Russia has been accused of carrying out a nerve agent attack against former Russian spy Sergei Skripal and his daughter. The attack occurred in Salisbury, located in the Southeast of the United Kingdom, and has left Skripal and his daughter in comas. The nerve agent used was of Soviet origin, dating back to the 1970s and 80s. UK Prime Minister Theresa May said it was highly likely that Russia orchestrated the attack. Russia has directly denied the allegations and has claimed no responsibility for the attack.

The UK has been joined by the leaders of the United States, France, and Germany in accusing Russia of being behind the attack. Russia has also been the focus of the ongoing investigation into meddling during the 2016 US presidential election. The US intelligence agencies have accused Russia of being behind attempts to interfere in US elections and have warned about possible interference in the upcoming 2018 midterm elections.

“del Toro and Vanessa Taylor have reinvented [Shape of Water] into a new classic on its own.”

TIRE AND FURY! What is happening in the chamber of secrets

The Trump White House has completely demoralized the book in a tweet from the president: “So del Toro and Vanessa Taylor have reinvented Nemo into a new classic on its own.”

This, coming from the man that was one of Trumps favorite directors, is a perfect example of how he can not even try to get it right, or correct when they are wrong. Trump's Twitter tirades are an indicator of his complete lack of the truth, and how he is trying to be seen as the one with power. It is a clear indication of his inability to think critically and make sound decisions, which is a huge problem for the country as a whole.

Overall, I believe Fire and Fury by Michael Wolff is a great book to pick up if you want to find out more about what is happening in the Trump White House, no matter which end of the political spectrum you fall on. "The Shape of Water" has been shown to be a powerful and thought-provoking film that challenges the audience to question their assumptions about reality and the nature of human connections. It is a masterful movie, one that I highly recommend, if only to realize it is more than “Grinding Nemo”.

Wait,
This upcoming Monday marks around one month of my journey and my experiment with veganism. Through this I have learned a few things about cooking, myself, and even more about the outlook of my choice with other people. I had learned a few things that I will take and use to help better myself even if this change isn’t permanent.

One very important part and common misconception people have about those who partake in Veganism is that we cast shit up about it. I thought this was true myself as this definitely has been about 40% of all my conversations last month but when I looked back I overlooked a very important aspect of these conversations. These conversations obly arise when people would ask me about my choice. Why did you do it? What do you eat? Where do you get your protein? I would get asked these questions every day and I answered them to the best of my ability.

Another thing I learned about this diet is that it although they can be a lot healthier as most of the foods themselves are not inherently greasy it does not mean that it is healthier. As most of the meals I would eat had a lower calorie count I found myself being hungry after meals leading to more snacking than I usually do. This was not a good habit in my eyes and to go along with this there are still a multitude of foods that are vegan and not all healthy. I went to the bone a few times and was happy to find a Vegan section stocked with a new dish everyday although if I didn’t like this food then there was very little I could do about it. I would find myself taking this option about 75% - 80% of the time and usually filling the rest of my plate with French fries and/or a black bean burger. This isn’t bad as I understand the circumstances as veganism is very popular although this is definitely one of the drawbacks of this change.

In all I am still not sure about the permanence of this lifestyle change although I can definitly say I am becoming a better more well rounded person for trying this out. Stay tuned for the third and final chapter of this story coming out in I have no idea how long.

Contrary to popular belief being vegan food really can taste good!

Going off of that is the question of where do you get your protein? This was probably the biggest change in my diet as I had eaten chicken and other protein rich meats for the majority of my meals before this month so I had to make an effort for this in order to stay healthy. I made an effort to find protein rich foods and even an alternative plant based protein shake and There were no problems past that point. I may have not been consuming the same amount of protein as before although I did not have any problems throughout the month. I feel that the nutrients that I got from the generally healthier food I was eating was more than enough to counteract this deficiency. Or maybe I am completely wrong as this is just a speculation. In all I am not dead and I feel great.

A Kentuckians Quick Guide to Bourbon

Always Drink Responsibly

Thomas Hall

Staff Writer

Over the past few years, the bourbon market has been absolutely booming growing over 36% in the past 5 years. Now distilleries are opening up right and left in hope of sashing on the growing trend. So I thought I would compile some key facts to know that way you don’t look dumb next time you are out and want to have a drink a tad classier than natty light.

First and foremost it is important to know the difference between a bourbon and a regular whiskey. So, bourbon is to whiskey as squares are to rectangles and I know you all understood that because let’s face it we are nerds. The five things that must be their in order to make a whiskey a bourbon whiskey are:

1) It has to be aged in a new charred oak barrel, 2) The mash it is made from has 51% corn, 3) It has to be made in Kentucky, which is 95% of our bourbon and where it originated from.

Next everyone (over the age legal drinking age) should know how to drink bourbon properly because if you do not know how to drink it right you will probably hate it. In order to drink it right, you should first take a breath in then sip the bourbon then breathe out this helps dramatically cut down on the burn of drinking such a high proof bourbon and allows you to more fully experience the flavor palate.

Finally, again if you are of age you should know how to order bourbon at a bar. If you want a glass with just straight bourbon in it order a neat, some places will then ask you how many fingers you would like, this is not a sexual instead they are basically asking how many shots you would like because traditionally one pour of bourbon was equivalent to the width of one of the bartender’s fingers. Instead, if you want some ice in it cool down a bit, this, of course, is on the rocks, my personal favorite. Also, there are countless cocktails that use bourbon the most famous and best is a Manhattan.

While this is just the barebones it should be enough to get you started down the ever-growing craft spirits industry. Personally I recommend starting to drink bourbon when of age with someone that is into it because they will be able to teach you what their personal favorites are and point out the important tasting notes for that particular bottle.

The number one ingredient in your new favorite drink

80 proof (40% alcohol) the bourbon can not contain any added flavoring, coloring or other additives, which is what makes Jack Daniels a whiskey, not a bourbon, and (2) has to be aged for a minimum of 4 years while some bourbon age for 24+ however most whiskeys the older it is the more expensive it is in. There is a 4th unofficial rule in my book, it must be made in Kentucky, which 95% of bourbons are and where it originated from.

So if you are over the age legal drinking age I hope this helps you to drink bourbon properly.

"Do you have an attitude of gratitude?"  "F you!"

"Man, how did Socrates get so fat? He must have grown to town on those grapes."  - Rate My Prof

Decent Joe(nathan) of the Week

"Best Physics prof ever. He is very funny. He cares about his students. He wants everybody to do well. A lot of review sessions. However, he is kinda hard to follow, and tests are not easy. Take him if you want a fun teacher."  - Rate My Prof
